Continuation Sheet (PTO-303)

Application No.

At least the amendment to claim 1 appears to change the scope of the claim such that the examiner's rejection may be affected. Hence, further search and consideration is required by the examiner. However, after a quick analysis of the amendment to claim 1, the examiner feels that the amendment is not sufficient to overcome the prior art of record. For instance, in Chamdani, each buffer is associated with a separate bus, whether it be the bus carrying to the data to the buffer or the bus carrying the data from the buffer. A bus is a data-processing unit, where "unit" is not interpreted as having any special meaning. A data processing unit is simply a thing in a data processing system. And, a bus is a thing. Please note that there may be other ways in which the prior art reads on the current claim.

Furthermore, to address the amendment of claim 10, the examiner does not feel that applicant has narrowed the scope any more than when the claim included the negative limitation of "...includes no data destination information". And, the examiner maintains that the 1-byte header may be interpreted as the only data destination information. From column 2, lines 19-65, and column 7, line 25, to column 8, line 31, the 3-byte header includes a logical channel number, which is not data destination information, as applicant argues, because their is no correspondance between logical channel and physical link. Packet data assigned the same logical channel can be transmitted over different physical links. See the summary of invention. The logical channel number is instead used to separate and distinguish between packets. From Fig.6, the packets are stored either in destination 230-x or 220-x, and this destination is determined based on the LCSN, which is in the 1-byte header. In other words, the data destination is either input list 230-x or message buffer 220-x, and any information not resulting in a determination to store the data either in the input list or message buffer is not data destination information according to the examiner's interpretation. Hence, since the 3-byte header does not result in a selection between destination locations (i.e., input list an dmessage buffert), the 3-byte header is not considered data destination information. Consequently, the examiner maintains that his rejection is valid.
